Brian J. Connolly, Dwight H. Merriam : Group Homes: Strategies for Effective and Defensible Planning and Regulation before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Group Homes: Strategies for Effective and Defensible Planning and Regulation:

Group Homes fills a critical gap in the literature by analyzing and applying federal antidiscrimination law to the practical problems of planning for and regulating group homes for people with disabilities.

This book fills a void in the literature. Here we have in one highly readable volume all of the issues of planning for and regulating group homes, with a comprehensive treatment of the law, of course, but also good, practical advice and even draft regulations. (Patricia E. Salkin, dean and professor of law, Touro College, Jacob D. Fuchsberg Law Center) Even as a practitioner with four decades in the trenches, I'm impressed at how much I learned from Group Homes. Brian Connolly and Dwight Merriam have succeeded in distilling a large body of law and literature into a book that will serve local government, advocates, and neighbors well. (Edward J. Sullivan, chair of the Land Use Department, Garvey Schubert Barer) I have my perspective as an advocate for group home development, and I do not agree with all the authors have to say, but I must tell you that Group Homes is the best, most balanced treatment of the law, public policy, planning, and regulation for group homes. (Steven G. Polin, general counsel, Oxford House) About the Author Brian J. Connolly is an associate with the Land Use practice group at Otten Johnson Robinson Neff Ragonetti, P.C., in Denver, Co. Dwight H. Merriam founded Robinson Cole's Land Use Group in 1978.
